PCR sees Increase in Aggregation for Private Bank Clients

WILTON, CT, January 19, 2008 – Private Client Resources, LLC (PCR), the leading provider of global aggregation and consolidated reporting to private banks and advisors, announced a 25% growth in client enrollments in PCR Insight™ for 2007. PCR's High Wealth Data Set PCR Insight™ also rose from $9 billion to over $14 billion and is rising approximately 10% per month. PCR is an industry leading aggregation and financial reporting tool capable of creating a variety of customized reports on a client's entire wealth picture used by private banks and advisors.

Six large institutions and over thirty advisors accounted for this growth. Private bank advisors are facing increased competition from multi-family offices, boutique advisors and new wealth management entrants. These advisors are looking for a way to differentiate themselves. They see technology and relationship building as the answer. The increased client enrollments in PCR Insight™ grew from 6 large banking institutions, whose clients held an average wealth of $164 million. During that same time, the market value of institutional assets PCR aggregates grew 36%. PCR's clients include two of the top five wealth managers in the US.

"We are seeing an increased number of financial institutions outsourcing aggregation and client reporting. They realize the advantages of being the client's 'alpha advisor'; including increasing AUM, revenue and attracting new clients." said Christopher Snyder,

President & CEO of PCR. “With a 25% growth rate in 2007, it is evident clients are demanding to see their financial information aggregated in one place. This number will only increase as availability of aggregation grows.”

PCR serves as a veil in the high wealth market by collecting data from custodians and other record keepers, normalizing the data and providing daily consolidated reports to high wealth financial advisors or private banks.
